The smell of smoke

Thomas Farynor was a baker who lived in Pudding Lane in London. Early in the morning on 2 September 1666, he and his family were woken by one of their workers.

6

The worker could smell smoke. A fire had started! The fire soon spread and the flames became so fierce that it was impossible to escape down the stairs.

Making their escape

Throwing open an upstairs window, the family climbed on to their roof. The flames were getting stronger and they had to escape. Bravely they jumped on to the roof of a neighbour's house.

8

Their maid was too frightened to climb on to the roof. The smoke was getting thicker. Sadly, she died in the burning house.

It had been a very hot summer that year. The wooden buildings were so dry and they were so close together that it was easy for the fire to spread. The flames soon leapt from house to house.

10

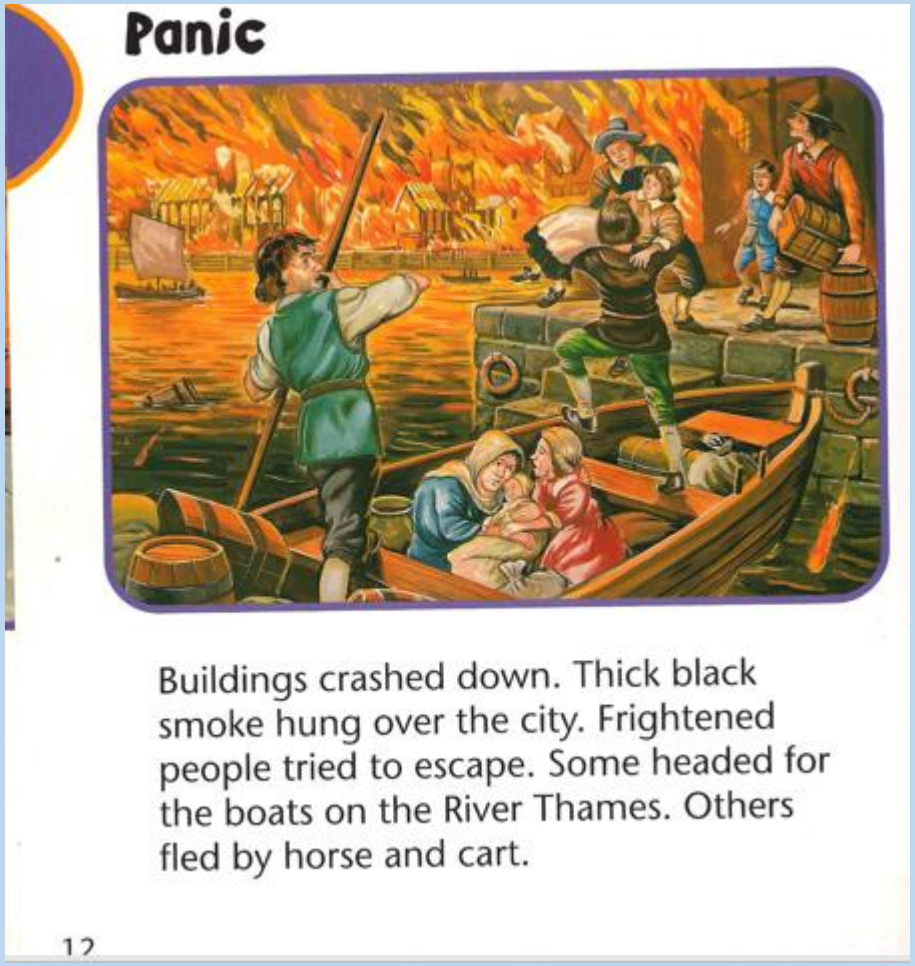

A few hours later the fire was out of control. The Lord Mayor was in charge of fighting fires in London. But by the time he arrived, it was too late.

The city in ruins

After four days the flames started to die down. The city was in ruins. People's homes and businesses had been burned to the ground.

16

Homeless people had to shelter under tents or in huts. Collections were made throughout the country to raise money for them.

The city is rebuilt

London had to be rebuilt. The King talked to architects. They said that buildings should only be built with brick or stone and that the streets had to be wider.

18

Gradually, over many years, London's ruins were replaced with new stone buildings on wider streets and with open squares.
